Personal Profile (基本情况简介)

(around 150 words, including basic introduction, research direction, teaching experience as supervisor for international students)

Dr Jianjun Xiang is professor of Preventive Medicine, School of Public Health, Fujian Medical University, and an adjunct senior research fellow and PhD supervisor of The University of Adelaide. He was a public health physician in Fujian Provincial Center for Disease Control and Prevention between 2006-2010, mainly undertaking public health events investigation and emergency response. He obtained his PhD from The University of Adelaide in 2014 under the support of China Scholarship Council-University of Adelaide Joint Scholarship. Afterwards, he continued his postdoctoral research in University of Adelaide (2015-2019) and was appointed as epidemiologist and data analysisit in South Australian Health & Medical Research Institute (2016-2018). He has wide research experience in climate change and population health, with a particular focus on heat-related occupational injury and productivity loss, climate-sensitive infectious diseases, air pollution, and wastewater-based epidemiology. His research was recognized by a number of honours such as Australian National OHS Education Awards, Kerry Kirke Award of Public Health Association of Australia, and nomination of Australian Tall Poppy Science Award. He has published more than 60 peer-reviewed journal articles.
